

ROAD OPENING IS CELEBRATED

Owasso Shows Its Jubilation by Staging a Big Barbecue

NOW PART OF TULSA

Tulsa-Owasso Hard-Surfaced Highway Is Now Part of County Paved System

Special to The World.

OWASSO, Dec. 13.—The red letter day of Owasso's history, and it has a most interesting career, being one of the oldest towns in Tulsa county, occurred today when the Tulsa-Owasso highway, a fraction over 14 miles in length, was officially opened.

Citizens of Mingo school community, Duncan and Collinsville, as well as a small party from Tulsa, came here today and helped the Owasso folks in celebrating the official completion of the hard-surfaced road, which Commissioner Fleet E. W. Hedgecock says will be built on to Collinsville during the coming year.

A barbecue, with refreshments followed by a public program in the auditorium of the joint consolidated school building, took place in the afternoon and a dance at night concluded what local business men ascribed was the greatest event ever held in Owasso.

More than one thousand persons enjoyed the barbecue, which was held in the gymnasium of the joint consolidated school, because of the wintry weather out of doors. It is estimated that had the weather been warmer at least 1,500 persons would have come here for the celebration.

The schools at Mingo and Owasso were dismissed so that the children might participate in the street parade at 11:45 a. m., headed by the Collinsville I. O. O. F. band of 10 pieces. At the end of the parade of 400 children were two floats, depicting work of the agricultural and home economics classes of the joint consolidated school.

Photographs of the marching school children, and of the crowd in line to be served by the wives and daughters of Owasso's leading citizens, were taken by G. L. Talmage of Tulsa.

"That the completion of the 104 miles of hard-surfaced highways in Tulsa county, with Tulsa as the center, is developing a whole-hearted spirit of community brotherliness between the towns along these roads," is what C. E. Dickson, president of the First State bank of Owasso, said at the opening of the exercises.

His view was reiterated by George M. Janeway, president of the Collinsville National bank and head of the Collinsville chamber of commerce, and L. G. Robertson, principal of the Mingo school. The three men stressed the idea that the completion of the hard-surfaced roads did not destroy the small village and towns and hold up large cities like Tulsa, but that the hard-surfaced roads brought the small towns and further developed the community brotherhood idea.

The same viewpoint was further set forth in the speech of the Tulsa representative, who said that the road is a party on "Roller" by several of the Owasso women. It

There are roads that lead to Tulsa. There are roads that lead to Sperry. There are roads that lead to the town of Tulsa.

But the road that gets the best of all roads. There are roads that lead to Collinsville.

And it is as fine as it can be. It is the road from Tulsa to Owasso. It is the road that appeals to me.

J. D. Peters, a farmer in the Owasso neighborhood, said that the completion of the road to Owasso from Tulsa was in his view one of the greatest benefits that the farmers of Tulsa county had received for it gave him an opportunity to move his products to market without wearing out his farm animals and equipment.

Love also declared that he was proud that he was a farmer and that he believed the time would soon come when farmers were highly regarded than they were at present. Along this line, he said that the rapid growth of the country and the decline in volume of unemployed laid in the country, proved that one of the problems of the future was raising food for the coming generations.

Charles Southward, superintendent of the school, said that it was the ambition of Owasso people that sometime in the near future a large school be built that would be adequate to accommodate a crowd like that which was in attendance. The joint consolidated school, the first of its kind in Oklahoma, has 74 students in the high school, 25 in the junior high school and 250 in the grades.

It serves an area of 62 square miles, 28 miles of which is in Rogers county, the remainder in Tulsa county. The children from the six fire zones are picked up each day in exceptionally large motor trucks and returned home after school.

The vocational agricultural class, directed by R. L. Riley, is one of the best established in the county and is now in its fourth year. It has established a close co-operation of the farmers in the Owasso district. At the celebration he had exhibited a model of a fool proof hen house, built by boys of his class in poultry.

The stock and $32,528,000 of the bonds will be used in acquiring additional railroad properties.

BRYAN CONDEMNS RULE OF WEALTHY

Commoner, in Interview, Is for Policy Strengthening Nation

Copyright, 1922 by International News Service.

NEW YORK, Dec. 13.—Though optimistic of what the coming year will bring to the United States, William Jennings Bryan today emphatically denounced the rule of the rich that he claims now controls the country and urged as new policy which would strengthen the nation at home and abroad, the giving of all possible moral support to European nations and a stringent enforcement of the prohibition laws by blunt talk of foreign powers.

The commoner, in an exclusive interview with International News Service saw little of the discouraging in the reported breakdown of the national and state machinery to cope with the liquor problem. Reports of the breakdown, he said, are greatly exaggerated.

As a solution to the existing liquor problem, he suggested boards of investigation that would make clear to the public the real state of affairs in the industry in question, relying upon public pressure to force action before actual strikes or lockouts occurred. But in event of a strike or lockout, Bryan advocates laws that would give the government the power to take over the industry and operate them for the public welfare until a settlement between the opposing forces is reached.

He said: "I think it very unfortunate that we did not go into the league of nations with reservations, when we had an opportunity and unfortunate again that the republicans did not carry out their promise of an association of nations."

"The name is immaterial and the details are comparatively unimportant. The outstanding fact is that we have a moral influence that we are not using and a world confidence that is not being employed as it should be."

"Europe seems unable to forget the past and plan for a future based upon international co-operation and good will and no nation except ours is in a position to act as a trusted advisor and bring about harmony."

Not Bound by Europe. "I am glad we have a representative at Lausanne. I think that we should respond to every call for advice with the understanding that we reserve the right to decide for ourselves what we shall do and that we are not bound by any action taken by other nations in regard to European affairs."

"In other words, without surrendering independence of action, we should exert our moral influence to the full toward the promotion of universal peace."

"The European nations have military aspirations, commercial ambitions and colonial policies with which we have no sympathy and with which we can have no part. These interests, wholly their own, would make it impossible for them to consider our proposition, our wishes or our welfare when they took measures that might lead to war."

"I believe that they would be more likely to follow a peaceful course without an alliance than they would if they commanded our resources for the advancement of their interests."

All Honest Men. "The present administration is regarded by any honest man as the president and his advisors."

NON-WRINKLEABLE Ties—

"I want a tie the lining won't curl up in" has been the cry for years. The lining is always the first thing to go wrong in a tie. But now comes a tie with the lining made from a composition of haircloth sewed to the tie full length making it almost impossible for it to wrinkle. They are to necktiedom what Van Heusen's are to collars—positively the finest thing that ever happened. Those who have worn them say they will outlast three ties with the cotton felt lining. Getting Good Results With Gas Appliances

Sometimes in severe weather gas appliances may not give the service they should. Since more gas is burned in them in a day or two than in a month of mild weather, they may be affected by simple causes that are easily remedied.

Nearly always the trouble will be found in one or both of two causes—dirt and improper adjustment. Gas burners sometimes become clogged from dust, or food may boil over and cake on them. Their cleanliness is essential to economical and efficient burning. The same rule applies to heating appliances, also.

Regulate the Air

The hottest, most efficient gas flame is the short blue one. In cooking it can always be obtained, but in heating longer flames are used, and these may have a yellowish tinge. These flames should burn clearly, and care should be taken that air currents do not deflect them or cause them to "blow."

Gas fires should be almost noiseless. If they "blow," or roar, the mixture of air is not right. This can be regulated by opening or closing the air shutter on the intake valve until the right flame is obtained.

Call Upon Us

In the radiant type of heater a few tests will show you what quantity is required to heat the mantles to incandescence. More than that is unnecessary; less may not get efficient results.

Our service department is glad to help you in case of any difficulty in obtaining either a sufficient amount of gas or in getting the best results from your appliances. Call upon us.
